Dazzled the Aldermen with Her Hat and GownSweet Young Thing Fled When She Found
She Was at the Street-Cleaning Inquiry
Instead of Lawson Divorce Trial.

A beautiful young thing in a Paris hat, the most dazzling shadow-check princess, patent leather ties and cute little spots of the latest gray, strolled into the City Hall and looked about.

"Where is the case going on?" she asked the first man she met.

He was thinking of the street-cleaning investigation, so he directed her to the Aldermanic chamber. She climbed the steps and stood for a time at the door. Mr. Rand was in the midst of one of his interruptions, and she saw him.

"Oh! he is that lovely Mr. Rand," she exclaimed. "I did not know he was going to cross-examine the witnesses. I must get a good seat before the crowd comes in."

She started for the inner rail, but was stopped by Doorkeeper Smith.

"You can't go in there," he said. "Ladies are barred from the floor."

That made her determination stronger. She would hear the testimony of the young fellow in that witness-chair or die in the attempt.

"I must hear that evidence," she almost shrieked.

"Oh! how lovely!" she replied, and she stepped to the gallery she went with such a rush that several old gentlemen who stood in range were blushing and hiding their faces yet.

Forty old fossils and two or three sleepy-heads were dozing in the gallery benches when she arrived. She took one look and thought Mr. Rand had made a mistake. It could not be possible that ladies were allowed on the gallery floor, either, she thought. She went down to investigate.

"Is it true that a lady will be allowed to go up there?" she asked, indicating the gallery, "and listen to the testimony?"

The young man to whom the question was addressed thought the dream in the shadow-chairs would be tolerated anywhere. Why she should want to hear the investigation of the Street-Cleaning Department was a mystery that but for the boldness of the infatuated youth would have been forever unsolved.

He followed her to see that she got a good seat up close to the front, and then he lingered near to volunteer explanations in case of need.

She sat for a while without saying a word, while Mr. Huguet, Mr. Evans' young assistant, asked questions as to the public contents of ash cans and the cost per car mile of hauling rubbish as compared with the cost of hauling paper and ashes. She did not understand.

"When will the red-headed boy testify?" she asked with an innocent and captivated show of indifference and maiden modesty.

This time the volunteer interpreter of street-cleaning mysteries did not understand.

"That red-headed boy?" he gasped.

"Why, the one that washed the dishes and mended the baby's clothes and swept up and helped Mrs. Lawson about the house," he said.

"You want to go across to the Court-House in Brooklyn," said the volunteer. "What you want is over there. This is the street-cleaning investigation."

"There is an odor of garbage about," she said as she headed for Brooklyn to hear the Lawson divorce case.
